CANADIAN WOMEN'S WORK

BY LUCINDA.

The annual sales for the disposal of the work the women belonging to church and charitable organizations have been making during the summer will soon be in full swing. Let me say, as a person who has helped and directed sales and as a newspaper woman who has attended dozens of them, "Make your date before hand by an advertisement in your local paper." It is too bad to have several sales come on the same day or, in a smaller town, in the same week. If every society just put in a few lines to say that the sale would be held on such-and-such a date, this would be avoided. From years of experience in attending social affairs held in connection with societies we can unhesitatingly say "It pays to advertise." Then make the rooms pretty. It is quite worth while. One person goes to be sale early in the afternoon and goes out again and meeting a friend says, "You should go to the sale. The rooms are so charmingly decorated and you get such hot tea, dainty rolls, sandiches and cakes and the work is well worth seeing." There are many things that are pretty as well as useful. We have got away fairly well from the idea that a piece of "fancy work" should be a thing of beauty (often questionable) and no thing more. We want to be able to do something with the things we buy or if they are for a christmas gift for a friend, one would like her to exclaim, "Now that is just what I needed," instead of "It is pretty, but shall I do with it?" The vogue today is for neat dainty work instead of the bold, effective style for towels, table linen and such things. Bags are always good for they wear out and women like to have several, a brocade or embroidered silk one not too large to hold a small piece of work, or to carry to teas or bridges with a compact and handkerchief.

The long evening dress is definitely in in England. Among the gowns worn at a recent smart function in London, seventy-five per cent. had skirts, at the shortest place, four inches below the knee and the length added to by drapes and trains reaching to the ground. Paris notes say that the evening gowns are even longer there.

A reader asks, "What is the proper way to use your knife and fork at dinner?" Use your left hand in your right hand and the fork in your left. Cut the meat as you wish to eat it, not all at once. The fork will be held with the prongs down and the meat and vegetables placed upon it with the knife. Cut a piece of meat, fowl and vegetables, the fork is never held in the right hand. For fish, when fish knives and forks are no used, the fork is properly held in the right hand and the steel knife not used. No matter what some authorities and cook books say this is the correct way to eat your dinner in Canada and if you go to big banquets and luncheons you will find that the people who really know, use their knife and fork, so do as we have described.

For school lunch give some raw fruit, home grown, and some vegetables, either in a cream soup to be heated, or raw. The Women's Institutes at their autumn conventions have been stressing the point of hot school lunches and showing how the children who are too far away from home to return for dinner, can have something hot in the middle of the day. Don't give them pastry nor rich cake" said Miss Florence Eadie, the bright young girl who is a speaker of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, and who was one of the speakers at the convention of sub-division three of Eastern Ontario held last week at Kingston.

The Women's Institutes of Lennox and Addington contributed largely to the success of the convention at Kingston. Mrs. F. Hamm told of the work in her district and said that there was no friction between the W. I. and the church societies. Mrs. A. E. Huffman, Moscow, who kindly brought the most beautiful piece of needlework, original in design, which increased its interest fourfold, was surrounded by a crowd of women who wanted to see the counterpane made from flour bags and enriched with drawn work, which was the admiration of Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto this fall. Mrs. Huffman also presided at the final session of the convention, when the new chairman elected was Mrs. C. C. Abbott, Pittsburg, Mrs. G. W. McNaughton was re-elected secretary-treasurer and the committee was also re-elected. At the banquet at La Salle Hotel the ladies provided by Kingston and Addington and very delightful was the duett, "Come Where the Lillies Bloom," sung by Mrs. Pitt, Iroquois, and her daughter, Mrs. Eppiett, of Napanee. Mrs. Ernest Wright, of Violet, gave a report on what was being done for the health of the community. Mrs. W. Fretts spoke on Canadian industries and referred to the exhibition of Canadian textiles on view, and Mrs. A. F. Young, Bath, urged publicity in the press and make an appeal for the branches to send live news and not take up time and space writing of non-essentials, such as the minutes of the last meeting being read and so on. Mrs. Jas. Laughland, of Napanee, gave an excellent report on education and it would appear that the W. I. is doing a splendid work along that line.

COLLEGIATE NEWS

On Tuesday afternoon the Collegiate pupils were addressed by Dr. Solandt, assoc.ate manager of the United Church Publications, the third largest publishing house in America. The speaker gave a splendid talk on the value of selective reading, showing how we might gain companionship with the greatest men of all time. He warned them against reading anything which would degrade the mind, or which would not contribute something to character. In their schoolwork they were never to permit a teacher to put them past anything which they did not understand.

On Wednesday afternoon, the final game of the football schedule was played in Deseronto. Napanee retained its record for losses by suffering defeat to the score of 19-0. Deseronto were out to win from the start and by determined playing, they went through and around the local line for big gains. On Saturday, Deseronto played in Picton, but were defeated 5-3. This gives Picton the right to play off with the winners of the Belleville group.

The first Junior Spartan and Athenian game was played at the Driving Park on Thrsday afternoon after 4 o'clock. It was a very close game, only one score being made on either side, the Athenians winning by 5-0. The second game of the series will be played on Wednsday or Thursday of this week.

Two of the Collegiate boys were prize winners in the County Agricultural Judging last week. Miss Curtin raised second and George Purcell fifth in the team of ten boys who will go to the Winter Fair at Toronto this next month.

DESERONTO.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dewar, of Belleville, were in town Thursday evening.

A very delicious chicken supper was served by the Ladies' Aid of the Church of the Redeemer in the White Hall on Thursday evening. A handsome crowd attended and during the supper Mrs .Eva Watson gave instrumental selections. The ladies deserve great credit for their splendid supper.

The junior branch of the Woman's Auxiliary held their weekly sewing meeting at the home of the president, Mrs. Edward Smith, on Thursday.

A most enjoyable meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at St. Mark's church on Saturday afternoon, when Mrs. Price, Mrs. Morton, Mrs. Lowe and Miss Van Straubenzie were present. The latter organized a branch of the Junior Woman's. The members of the W. A. branches of Tyendinaga Parish ,together with Rev. Herbert and Mrs. Pringle, were also present. Splendid addresses were given by Mrs .Price, Miss Vanstraubenzie, Mrs. Morton and Mrs. Lowe and Rev. Mr. Pringle. Rural Dean Radcliffe opened the meeting with prayer and the hymns were played by Miss Rebecca Smith. At the close of the meeting tea was served by the members of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Mark's. Mrs. George Hartley and Mrs. Harbinson poured tea and the members of the Girls' Branch served the guests. Mrs. M. Lowe is the president of the Girls' Branch.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen McKay ,of Montreal, Que., are guests of the former's sister, Mrs. C. T. Wallbridge.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen McKay and Dr. and Mrs. C. T. Wallbridge attended the rugby game in Toronto on Saturday.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

On Thursday evening, Oct. 18th, the friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. James Booth met at their home to show their love and esteem for them before leaving the neighborhood for their new home in Selby.

The following address was read by Mrs. T. J. Russell :

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Booth :

We, your neighbors, are gathered here at your home tonight to express our friendship to you and our regret at your departure from our neighborhood. It is always the case that the time we say farewell is the time that we realize most keenly the place the friends have filled in our hearts and lives. So we realize to-night the worth of your kind neighborliness and your hospitality have endeared you to all of us.

We cannot permit your departure from us without expressing, in some tangible way, our sincere esteem and good will. Therefore, we ask you to accept this form stand and these cuff links—not merely as a farewell gift, but as a link which shall serve to bind our friendships closer together.

Signed in behalf of your neighbors.

Mrs. Arthur McKnight,
Mrs. Wm. T. Winter.

Mr .Booth, in his quiet, kind way, made a reply thanking his friends for their kindness and inviting them to visit them in their new home in Selby. After which lunch was served and all left with a hearty hand shake with Mr. and Mrs. Booth.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

THAT a store should be a selling place—not a storage place.

THAT stores that accumulate many "shelf-warmers" are out of luck. It's usually their own fault ; they should not try to place the blame elsewhere.

THAT profits are made when goods are sold. Many merchants seem to forget that fact.

THAT goods must not only be bought right, but must be sold right.

THAT advertising through the printed page is the greatest sales creator known.

THAT everywhere in every fine of business, advertising is making real friends for those who advertise.

THAT well advertised goods are goods of known and proven value They have won the confidence of the public.

THAT dealers, awake to thedemands of the public,never try to substitute for quality. The consumers can be fooled with unknown goods.

Well advertised lines of goods not only make customers, but gain their good will and their future business.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY G. C. TRUMBULL,
(Editor of The Sunday School Times.)

WORLD'S TEMPERANNCE SUNDAY.

Sunday, Nov. 4—Romans 13:1-14.

Golden Text—Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. (Rom. 13:10.)

There is enough, and more than enough, in this single brief chapter to keep every true Christian today from the use of alcoholic beverages. If one lives in a Province or State or country where prohibition is the law, or where local option has decided against the drink traffic, the first half of the chapter leaves no alternative for the Christian but obedience to the law. If one lives in "wet" territory, wherever it may be, the second half of the chapter enjoins abstinence, not the compulsion of law, but by the compulsion of love. And the conclusion of the chapter is inescapably plain for all Christians no matter what the laws of their local Governments may be; "Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness."

Obedience to human law is a Christian duty. Good Christians are good citizens, always and everywhere. They are law-keepers, not law-breakers. "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers," says the Holy Spirit through Paul. The passage clearly shows that these "higher powers" are not heavenly powers, but earthly and human, the Governments. The reason is at once given: "For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God." This shows that even when human Governments are corrupt they are in position of power under God; they could not be where they are but for God's permission and in a large sense His ordaining. That is, the universe is all subject to government and therefore all Governments, whether good or bad, are but carrying out the God-ordained principle of rule; law rather than lawlessness; authority instead of anarchy.

The Lord Jesus Christ laid down the same principle when He commanded: "Render, therefore, unto Caesar the things which be Caesar's, and unto God the things which be God's." (Luke 20:25.)

We hear much today about the unrighteousness and cruelty of capital punishment; there is superficial and sentimental talk about abolishing it in the interests of humanity and in regard for our fellows. All such mistaken purpose is met by the fact that God ordained capital punishment early in human history, and reaffirmed it for the present Church age in the clearest way. He ordained it immediately after the flood, when He committed Government into the hands of men, requiring men to be responsible for their fellow-men; "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed" (Gen. 9:6). That divine command has never been revoked through all the Scriptures and through all the centuries. It is reaffirmed in this lesson when we are told that the human ruler "beareth not the sword in vain; for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil."

The honest payment of Government taxes is a Christian duty, here enjoined: "For for this cause pay ye tribute also, for they are God's ministers."

The payment of debts is a Christian duty: "Owe no man anything." But just here a certain debt is a duty, as we read on, "but to love one another." Every Christian is in debt, and ought to be in debt, to his fellow-men in the obligations of love. Thus he will keep the whole law, "For he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law."

And as we read that "love worketh no ill to his neighbor," we see the duty and privilege of refraining from alcoholic drinks, which certainly have worked untold ill to our neighbors.

This lesson tells us that "rulers are not a terror to good works but to the evil." The Sunday School Times publishes an anecdote illustrating this verse: "An Irishman was being tried in a Kansas town. His was a petty offence. The Judge asked him if there was any one present who could vouch for his character. 'To be sure, your Honor, there's the Sheriff.' The Sheriff looked amazed. 'Your Honor,' he declared, 'I do not even know the man. 'You Honor,' came back the Irishman as quick as a flash, 'he lived in this county for more than twelve years, and the Sheriff doesn't even know me yet. Isn't that a character for you?'"

The best part of this lesson chapter is its closing verse. It gives us the secret of everything; how to be good citizens, how to obey human laws, how to obey God's laws, and live the life of love toward all. "But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof." The reason we need make no provision for sinning is that "they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." (Gal. 5:24).

Call up your customers by long distance

An occasional call will make it almost impossible for them to stop trading with you.

Do you realize that one of the largest returns you can secure from the expenditure of a small sum is to be had by calling up old customers occasionally by Long Distance?

Friendliness begets friendliness. How can you or I keep away from a merchant who spends his money to show his interest in our affairs? We can't.

The newspaper editor counts on this trait in human nature. He mentions subscribers' names frequently because he knows they will look for them in his paper.

The merchant who occasionally calls customers by Long Distance is one who can't be overlooked or forgotten.

The Palace Guard.

It is only very occasionally that any regiments outside the Brigade of Guards are on guard at Buckingham Palace or St. James' Palace. But a line regiment recently took over this duty, the Irish Guards being relieved by the 1st Battalion Prince of Wales' Volunteers (south Lancashire).

A critical eye watches the daily changing of the guard outside the palaces, and comprises many good judges of military "form." They have agreed that the men from Lancashire make a very efficient substitute for the Guardsmen.

Railway Ties of Douglas Fir.

In a survey of Empire-grown timbers published by the Imperial Economic Committee in London, England, attention is drawn to the possibilities of extending the use in Britain of Douglas fir from British Columbia. The South-Sea Railway, it appears, has arranged to test Douglas fir sleepers (the ti railway also creosoted in Canada with a view to determining whether objection to their use arises from a unsuitable creosoting treatment. The Research Committee of the Railway is also investigating the means of obtaining a better finish on Douglas fir for carpentry.

Flag Pole 214 Feet High.

The University of British Columbia has a new flag pole second only in height to that at Kew Garden in London, England—the tallest in the world. Both are one-piece poles of Douglas fir, that at Kew being 214 feet high and that at the University 206 feet high. The Vancouver Court House has one measuring 197 feet, while the Provincial Parliament Buildings have one measuring 165 feet.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an antiacid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition,—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

Olive's Courtship

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY

Author of "A Cruel Revenge," "A Forbidden Marriage," "A Beautiful Coquette," "The Heiress of Cameron Hall"

"I do not look at me like that, Roger!" cried his brother; "though the world turn against me, let me feel that you will stand by me staunch and true. You will find mercy in your heart for me?" and he held out his white hand, shapely as a woman's, toward him—but Roger Glendenning shrunk from him as though he had been a viper; he could have forgiven him the terrible crime of forgery, hard though it might have been to condone so bitter an offense, he who had such grand principles, such noble views of right and wrong; but not while the sun shone and the stars gave light, and he walked the bleak, desolate earth, could he ever forgive this handsome younger brother from stealing surreptitiously the one being in this world whom he loved. He would have a thousand times rather have given his brother Oscar every drop of his beautiful blood. In that one moment he suffered silently the pain of death.

"Advise me, Roger," cried Oscar Glendenning, cowering in abject terror before the stern man before him, the grayish pallor of whose face and burning eyes frightened him. "For the sake of my beautiful Olive, save me from Judge Kneeland's wrath. It—it—would break her heart if—if—she knew."

Those words acted like magic upon the dazed senses of Roger Glendenning. His brother had touched the right chord, the hidden spring in the other's nature. What would he not do for Olive's sake? He would give up his very life if it would bring her one moment of happiness—keep her from having one heart pang.

He shuddered, drew his breath hard, and looked at the handsome, trembling wretch before him, standing there with his soul torn with distracting anguish. A horrible thought had come to him, and a temptation that almost made him cry aloud in triumph.

Why should he aid him? Let him take the full consequences of the crime he had committed. They would send him to prison for the best of his life, and that would part him as effectually from beautiful Olive Kneeland as though he lay in his grave fathoms deep under the green grass and nodding daisies.

"For Olive's sake, save me! It would break her heart if she but knew!" sobbed his brother, in a dry, hard voice. "It would be a stab in her breast that would cost her her sweet young life. She would pine and die before your eyes, Roger."

For one moment Roger Glendenning hesitated between right and wrong, brotherly love and a terrible temptation.

A bird flew by the window, uttering a low, plaintive note; the wind stirred a bunch of lilac blooms in a glass on the mantel; a snatch of gay song from some street urchin floated up to him.

It was only a moment, but in that length of time Roger Glendenning seemed to live long, weary, desolate years.

Would Olive die if anything happened the man she loved? His head drooped, his strong frame trembled, his lips quivered, and he cruelly clinched his hands together; but he did not even feel the pain of the sharp nails in his flesh, his mental torture was so great.

Can it be see her die?—starve for the want of love that was denied her? Ah, God! be, of all other men in the world, realized how desolate her life would be. No! not for Olive's sake he must try and save his brother from the fruits of his desperate act, even though giving him his freedom built an insuparable wall between Olive and himself while their lives lasted.

"The note was for one thousand dollars, and it falls due to-day, you say?" he inquired, hoarsely.

Oscar bowed his head in assent, nervously pulling at his moustache, his fingers twitching terribly.

"I will try and get the money for you somehow," returned Roger, huskily. "You well know that I have no such sum, but perhaps I can make it up by borrowing from several friends. But believe this: I do not shield you from brotherly love, for I abhor your crime; and though you were a thousand times my brother, I would see you punished for your folly and unpardonable boldness; but for her sake I will save you at any cost to myself—yes, at—any—cost to myself," he repeated, brokenly.

"I am grateful to you, Roger, from the depth of my heart!" cried Oscar, attempting to seize the other's hand, but Roger waved him back with bitter sternness.

"Do not come near me! do not touch me! you would but add insult to injury. Who has the note?"

"A money-broker down the avenue."

"His name?" said Roger, sternly.

"Throckmorton."

Roger Glendenning started. He knew well how enraged Judge Kneeland would be upon discovering this note in the hands of the man who had been his bitterest enemy for years, if it were to be presented for payment, and it might be sent to him at any moment.

Roger put his hat on quickly and strode toward the door, holding it open for his brother to go out.

"I will meet you in the hotel office on the corner of this street, in an hour from now, and will have the money if it be in my power to raise it," he said.

"You are too good to me," murmured Oscar, brokenly, hiding his wretched white face in his hands; and thus he left the office and went slowly down the broad stair-way and out into the crowded, sunlit street.

"Thank goodness, I have got over this bridge in safety," he muttered, "or will have got over it by noon, for Roger will get the money somehow for me, since he has given me his promise. That little ruse that entered my brain so cleverly—about telling him I had proposed to the old judge's pretty daughter, and that she accepted me—is what worked on his sympathy and did the trick for me, but for that, I feel sure he would have raised his hand to keep me from facing the terrible consequences."

He walked away with a pale face indicated by his brother, and gave himself up to the torture of wait ng. Never did an hour drag by more slowly. The hands of the great clock on the wall seemed to creep along. Five, ten minutes passed; the appointed time had come and gone, and Roger had not kept his promise. What was detaining him? Roger was always so punctual; this was the most prominent of his many virtues. Perhaps it was difficult for him to raise the amount. Twenty minutes, half an hour, and still another half was measured from the world's time by the sun that crept higher and higher in the heavens. The terrible strain and anxiety on Oscar's mind became intolerable. He felt that he was growing mad; the blood was leaping like fire through his veins; and he had paced the floor up and down so long and so excitedly, he felt that the attention of every one in the office was being called to him, and that he was the cynosure of all eyes.

Suddenly the thought came to him that Roger was playing him false. What had happened? Why did he not come? If he was finding it extremely difficult to raise the amount, he might have sent him word, knowing how anxious he would be. The conviction that all was not right grew upon him as the moments dragged their slow lengths by without bringing his brother.

"It is my own fault if I allow myself to be caught like a hare in a trap," he muttered. "But one course is left me, and that is to fly from New York within the hour. Every instant is precious. Fool, idiot that I have been to have loitered here!"

Hailing a cab from the window, he hurried out of the hotel and sprung into it.

"To the Grand Central Depot!" he said, hoarsely. "Make it as quick as you can, cabby."

The man touched his hat and then whipped up his horses.

Looking backward through the carriage window, Oscar Glendenning saw two officers that had come hurriedly down the street disappear within the door-way of the hotel which he had just left, reappearing the next instant looking eagerly up and down the street.

"I was just in time," muttered Glendenning, hoarsely. "Drive on quickly, cabby!" he shouted. "Double your speed and I will double your fare."

He arrived at the Grand Central a moment before one of the trains started.

"A ticket to the very end of the route!" he cried, hoarsely, thrusting two twenty-dollar notes in at the ticket-seller's window. He grasped his ticket and change, and had barely time to spring aboard ere the express steamed out of the depot.

He glanced wildly about as he sank down into the nearest seat, and saw that it read Hempden, Louisiana.

"As well there as anywhere else, I suppose," he muttered, thrusting the bit of pasteboard into the band around his hat. "I wish I were at the other end of the world just now. I shall feel more at ease with every mile I place between New York and myself. It was a dastardly trick for Roger to play upon me, though," he ruminated, frowning deeply, "and I am not likely to forget it against him in a hurry. He might have refused to aid me up and down; then I would have known what to expect; it's the knowledge of his treachery that leaves the sting. We may meet again, brother Roger, and it may be my turn to pay you back in your own coin for to-day's work, that might have wrecked my life."

CHAPTER III.

When Dr. Glendenning had found himself alone, after the constrained departure of his brother, for a moment he felt quite dazed; his head beat in great strangling throbs, and the busy world outside seemed to stand still.

He aroused himself by the greatest effort to look life in the face once more and bear the double blow that had fallen on him. It had been the own fault, this terrible thing that had happened; he should never have introduced his handsome, fascinating brother to the young girl he loved, but to whom he had not as yet had the courage to declare that love.

He had toiled hard, and had shared his earnings liberally with his brother while Oscar was out of a situation. Thus furnished with spending-money and his expenses paid, handsome Oscar seems a no hurry to find employment to do." When Roger could remonstrate with him, and remind him that he had to work or starve, Oscar was always ready with his answer, declaring enthusiastically that he was just on the point of a big deal that would mean a fortune. He generally added, graciously, that he would share it with Roger, dollar for dollar.

These schemes always proved visionary; they were sure to fail through, or fail to come to a head, and at last Roger grew tired of listening to them or hoping for good results. In ruminating over the matter, Roger always said to himself that Oscar was certainly extremely anxious to work, but fate was against him, and he could find no congenial situation open to him, but that his ill-fortune must take a turn soon. And this great-hearted, innocent fellow thanked Heaven that he was making sufficient for both, and could help Oscar bridge over the present tide of ill luck.

That Satan always finds mischief for idle hands to do was clearly exemplified in this case. Roger thought of that as he stood alone in the judge's private inner office, battling with the greatest sorrow that had ever come to him.

While he had been busily toiling, Oscar had found plenty of time to visit Olive Kneeland's home, walk with her, to drive with her, to accompany her here and there, and make love to her; while he—he! how blind he had been to it all until the blow fell!

From that moment he meant to tear all thought of beautiful Olive from his breast, even though it cost him his life; yet to give her up to his own brother, name, name, indeed, a fellow Oscar, was more than he could endure with fortitude.

"May Heaven find pardon for me!" he muttered. "I must flee toward him as Cain fell toward Abel, but for her sake I will try and save him from the consequences of his crime. Yes I will do everything in my power for him because she loves him, and to punish him would be to strike a blow at her love!"

Crushing his hat firmly over his eyes, he was about to pass hurriedly out of the office, wondering meanwhile, where he should go first to try and raise that thousand dollars which meant so much to his brother, when Judge Kneeland's bell rang sharply. Roger drew back, turning pale to the lips. He prayed to Heaven that the judge was not at leisure, and had sent for him to talk with him upon the subject under discussion when they were interrupted. Great God! what could he say about that now, only to tell him that he had since learned that it was useless for him to aspire to Olive's hand, for he had just discovered that she loved another, and that other his own brother?

Then, too, every moment wasted was fatal to Oscar, for might not that note be presented at any time? He must make some excuse to leave the office. Oscar would be waiting for him.

Little dreaming what was in store for him, the private secretary opened the judge's door and entered his presence. One glance, and he did not dare to take the second forward, but stood as if rooted to the spot.

Judge Kneeland stood in the centre of the room, his face fairly livid in spots and purple in spots, his eyes aflame with rage most terrible to behold, and his lips flecked with froth.

In his hand he held a slip of paper. Roger Glendenning knew almost before he spoke that it was the fatal note. Great God! he was too late to save Oscar, for Olive's dear sake!

"What is the meaning of this!" thundered the judge, turning upon the astonished secretary with his answer, declaring enthusiastically that he was just on the point of a big deal that would mean a fortune. He generally added, gra-

In 5 MILLION HOMES Tonight

A host of babies will enjoy sound sleep tonight. And their parents will have unbroken rest. Castoria is the cause of this contentment in a multitude of homes.

Good old Castoria! Children cry for it. Mothers swear by it. Not a household where there is an infant should ever be without it. A few drops of Castoria quiet Baby in a perfectly innocent manner. It is natural slumber that follows. Castoria is a purely vegetable product. No opiates. No narcotics. Of any kind.

Now you know why trained nurses give Castoria as often as an infant is ailing, or even restless. And why doctors tell mothers it is the first and only home remedy when Baby has constipation, colic, diarrhea, or other upset. It is made for babies, and safe to give babies, and for children of all ages.

Fletcher's Castoria is "old-fashioned" if you count its fifty years, but it's an old-fashioned mother, nowadays, who worries along without it. Twenty-five million bottles bought last year! Think of the number of mothers who rely on Castoria! All these mothers can't be wrong! To keep a bottle in the house is a precaution you owe your little one.

Woman Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sarnia, Ont.—"I am willing to answer letters from other women to tell them the wonderful good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did me. I cannot be thankful enough for the benefits I received during the Change of Life. I do housework and my troubles made me unfit to work. A friend advised me to try the Vegetable Compound. I felt great relief at once, began to regain my appetite, and my nerves got better. I will recommend your medicine to all with troubles like I had."—Mrs. John Beaucage, 162 N. Christine St., Sarnia, Ontario.

picture that he saw made his heart glow with warmth and pride. Was there anything in this world that he loved as he did his fair young daughter Olive, the light of his existence, the treasure of his old age?

She was standing in the centre of the lawn watching the gardener at work over one of the flower-beds—a tall, slim young girl with large, laughing blue eyes looking out of a very fair face whose only fault was the curling lips which betokened more than the usual share of waywardness and pride. The small head was crowned with a luxurious mass of nut-brown hair that glinted into gold where the sunlight fell on it.

There was too much character, too much fire and animation in her face for Olive Kneeland to be called beautiful, as poets and painters describe beauty. Graceful she certainly was from the crown of her fluffy brown head to the toe of her dainty slippered foot, and what was far better than beauty, she possessed, and unconsciously on her part, the power that is God's best gift to woman, the power of fascinating with her wonderful vitality, which was revealed in every glance, tone and word to those with whom she came in contact, and brought every heart at her feet.

She wore only a simple white challie gown sprinkled over with tiny forget-me-nots, and a white straw sailor-hat with a swallow's wing perched gracefully on one side of it. Yet even in this simple dress no princess could ever have looked more to the manor born.

Glancing up, she saw the judge standing at the window, and called to him at once to come out into the garden and see how finely the pansy-beds were doing. She met him half-way down the garden walk, ran up to him playfully, and linked her arm through his.

"I am so glad that you broke away from that stuffy old court-room long enough to come home and take luncheon with me to-day, papa!" she said. "I wanted to see you particularly."

"I thought you always wanted to see me particularly, Olive," he remarked, dryly.

"So I do, papa," returned the young girl. "But I mean I wanted to ask you about something that I want to do very much, and I want to ask your consent to it;" and the eyes that had been looking up into his fell shyly, and a crimson flush stole over the dimpled, half-averted face.

"You must not bring up that subject again about putting your name down for a big sum to aid the beauties. You've done enough for them. If that's what you want," said the judge, frowning.

"It is not that, papa," said Miss Olive, quietly.

"Nor shall I encourage you in any foolish extravagance. In my days young girls were very plain; they did not care for diamond-studded lockets, bangles, and all sorts of such nonsense to allow you to wear the diamonds your mother left you. I shall give them to you later, not now."

"I am two-and-twenty, papa—quite old enough to wear diamonds; but you are wrong again as to what is in my mind."

"Eh!" said the judge, putting on his gold-bowed glasses and peering at his daughter.

"I said you had not yet guessed what is in my mind, and you pride yourself, you know, about being pretty well able to read what is going on in the minds of the people who are brought before you," and she laughed a little low, clear laugh.

"Seeing you are all at sea and in a dense fog, I will tell you, papa, that it is—about—a—young—man."

The judge stood quite still and looked at her for fully a minute. She bore the scrutiny well.

"Come to the point at once, Olive," he said, impatiently. "I do not comprehend in the least what you are getting at."

"Of course you don't, you dear old darling!" returned Olive, creeping closer to him and nestling her brown head on his shoulder, that he might not see the blushes that she was sure would crimson her face when she made her request.

"Well, well," said the judge, "tell me what you want, Olive; what it is that you were so anxious to see me about and gain my consent to?"

She hesitated a moment, then said, coaxingly, as she slipped both slim white hands about his arms:

"I am invited to go sailing on Mr. Pointer's yacht to-morrow, with my

The Women's Institute at Work.

It will be of interest to the parents of the town to learn that the Women's Institute have secured the services of Mr. Kendall, organist in Trinity Church, to teach singing in the Public Schools of our town. Parents have expressed a wish for this work to be taken up for some time, and it is with confidence the W. I takes up this work, that the people will support their effort. And when the W. I. comes before the town with entertainments to raise funds, it will have the full support of the whole community.

Church of England Banquet at Bath.

The three congregations of Bath, Morven and Odessa, constituting the rectory of Bath, held a very successful and enjoyable special parish banquet in the Masonic Hall on Friday evening, Oct. 19th. The enlarged hall was filled to capacity, the long tables being nicely decorated and laden with a bounteous supply of good things, provided by the ladies of the parish. The rector, Rev. W. G. Swayne, who presided, explained that "this was not an effort to raise funds—that had already been provided for by the voluntary cash contributions of the church members, made in lieu of the usual annual public supper. A program of an exceptionally high order, consisting of inspiring addresses by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Seager, Bishop of Ontario ; His Honor Judge McLean, Picton ; Rural Dean Radcliffe, Deseronto ; Rev. R. J. Dumbrille, Napanee ; Rev. A. Strauthers, Adolphustown and Rev. H. Pringle, Tyendinaga. The musical numbers were excellent, consisting of a solo by Mr. Ralph Sexsmith, an instrumental duet by Mrs. A. Sexsmith and Miss Gwendolyn Swayne ; choruses by the choir of St. John's, Bath, the solo parts taken by Messrs. Arthur and Norman Wood, Miss Evelyn Bulch, Miss Sadie Collupy and Miss Gwendolyn Swayne, and a motion song by three little girls, Miss Marie Covert, Miss Pearl Bulch and Miss Florence Wilson. At the conclusion of the programme Mr. G. W. Cuppage moved, seconded by Mr. Loyst, a very hearty vote of thanks to the speakers and all those assisting in the evening's entertainment.

Died in Kingston.

Mr. George T. Sharpe, one of the prominent farmers of South Fredericksburgh, passed away on Sunday at the Kingston General Hospital after a short illness. Mr. Sharpe was a staunch Liberal and keenly interested in political matters, as well as a prosperous and practical farmer. Besides his widow he leaves two sons, Wilkie, who resides in Alberta, and Roderick, who has just returned from the west. The funeral took place from his late residence, Sillsville, on Tuesday afternoon at 2.30.

The Late John Martin.

An old and highly respected resident of the township of Richmond in the person of Mr. John Martin, passed away at his residence near West Plain on Friday evening. Although in poor health for some time, his case did not take a serious aspect until two weeks ago and owing to his advanced age, little hope was held out for his recovery. He was a member of West Plain United Church and was universally esteemed by a wide circle of friends Besides his sorrowing widow he leaves to mourn his loss, two daughters, Mrs. W. G. Pringle and Mrs. W. J. Tyner, both of West Plain, also three sisters, Mrs. Arnold, Mrs. Lasher, Mrs. Assel stine, and two brothers, Messrs. Christopher and David Martin.

Boy Drowned in River.

On Friday morning Clifford Leary, aged 6 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Leary, fell into the river off the stone wall near the railway bridge, at the east end of Dundas street. Two young companions were with him at the time and immediately ran to the Gibbard Furniture Shops and gave the alarm. Several of the employees went to the scene and discovered the lad's body floating near the foot bridge crossing to Springside park. The body was taken from the water and Dr. Galbraith and Mr. Jack Hayes of the Hydro Electric staff worked for some time trying to resuscitate the lad but of no avail. The funeral took place on Sunday from the home of his parents in Clarksville, to Riverview cemetery.

A coroner's jury will inquire into the accident on Monday afternoon.

Carnival ! Carnival !

Everybody come to the Armouries on Tuesday evening, Nov. 6th, and help to make the Carnival a great success. Bear in mind that all money goes to the relief of the poor and needy, so make a real Thanksgiving time by doing your part. In addition to the games there will be booths for cooked food, candy, fruits, vegetables and fancy work, and donations of articles for these different booths are asked. Let this be your invitation and get your contributions ready. Bring or send them to the Armouries Monday, Nov. 5th.

TOO FLATTERING.

Kellogg Made Peace But Spoiled His Own Plea.

Frank B. Kellogg, prominent U S politician, and author of the most recent peace plan, once promoted peace in a very odd way.

As a lawyer, he was trying to get as much alimony as possible for a lady client being sued for divorce by her husband. No eastern shave-artioneer could have been more eloquent in praise of a dark-eyed houri than was Kellogg in his flattering tributes to the tearful lady for whose income he was fighting. So successful were his efforts to make her appear a paragon of all the virtues, that her husband suddenly jumped to his feet.

"Your honor," he cried to the court, "I have suddenly decided to withdraw my suit. I find if my wife is willing I would like to have her come back to me."

While the ensuing sensation was at its height, the husband was begged to disclose his reason. He said: "Mr. Kellogg has presented her in such an attractive light that I've fallen in love with her all over again." And whether because the husband truly liked the wife more or the alimony less, peace was declared and the blushing lady left the court for a second honeymoon.

THE STORAGE OF VEGETABLES

(Experimental Farms Note)

A low temperature, slightly above freezing, is the best for the storage of all vegetables except squash and pumpkins, which keep best in a moderately warm room with dry air. It is not possible to store vegetables satisfactorily in a cellar containing a furnace, unless a room is partitioned off with access to the outside air for ventilation. It is better to store in a room with an earth floor, as this gives more humidity and less drying out of root crops, such as beets, carrots, and turnips. Onions, on the other hand, do best in a fairly dry air. Celery requires a storage room with a good circulation of air, and conditions which give dry foliage. It is necessary, however, that the roots of celery plants be in moist soil, so that the foliage will not wilt. To keep the roots moist and the foliage dry, a reasonable circulation of cool air is necessary. Closed-up rooms invite decay, if the temperature is high. Wilting of root vegetables may be prevented by covering with sand or sawdust.

Leaving the storage room open, particularly at night, is advisable until freezing weather approaches, when a cotton screen may be placed over the window, which will aid greatly in giving a uniform temperature. Later the ventilators should be closed during very cold weather.

The larger the bulk of vegetables the greater the need for a ventilating system to give a rapid change of air and allow the escape of warm air resulting from storage. Slatted-bottomed shelves one foot apart for onions, and two feet apart for cabbage, give excellent storage facilities. Cabbage may also be tied roots up to cellar joists.

A small area of parsnips and leeks should be left for digging in the spring. The parsnips should be dug early in the spring, and placed in storage for later use.

Everyday discoveries are being made with regard to ancient people.

When some workmen were clearing out the rubbish from one of the walls of the Acropolis in Athens, for which, by the way, Themistocles used anything that came handy, they came across two marble tablets sculptured in relief. And one of these tablets represented two youths holding hockey sticks in their hands ready to hit the ball, which lies between them, whilst a third is in the act of giving the signal to begin.

The new Canadian Pacific liner, "Duchess of York" has been launched at Clydebank, Scotland, by Her Royal Highness the Duchess of York. H.R.H. the Duke of York and other notables were present. The vessel is of 20,000 tonnage, and is the fourth and last of the "Duchess" quartette of steamships built for the service of the St. Lawrence route.

Two hundred Chinchilla rabbits accompanied by a ton of special food for their twelve thousand mile journey from England to New Zealand were recently handled by the Canadian Pacific Express Company. The little animals were bred in Lincolnshire and are to serve as a nucleus of a rabbit fur farm in Auckland. As rabbits are regarded as a pest in the Antipodes special arrangements had to be made to allow them to enter the country.

George Jihavicc, son of the Finance Minister of Czecho-Slovakia, is the latest addition to Alberta's list of notable farmers, held by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, whose E. P. ranch is only one royal demesne among several, including that of the Duke of Sutherland. Young Jihavicc, who is only 22 years of age, has settled near Lethbridge, where he is gaining farm experience on the farm of C. R. Daniel before launching out for himself.

Thirty-five visits and departures of Canadian Pacific steamships will be made in and out of the Port of Saint John during the coming winter season, between December 1st and April 26th, it is officially announced. This represents an increase of three over the previous season. The two new "Duchess" class steamers, the "Duchess of Richmond" and the "Duchess of York," make their first appearance on the sailing list, the former being due in New Brunswick on March 23rd and the latter on March 30th.

The promotion of two of Canada's best known hotelmen to important posts in the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been announced by the hotel department of the company. B. A. Neale, manager of the Chateau Frontenac at Quebec, has been appointed manager of the new 1,200-room skyscraper hotel in Toronto, the Royal York, which will be opened to the public next summer. His place in the great hotelery at Quebec will be taken by John Johnston who has been assistant manager at the Chateau for some time.

The distribution of dividend money every three or six months to shareholders of industrial and commercial enterprises in Canada came into many millions of dollars in a year. The money goes to an army of people throughout the country, many of whom depend on it for their living and it has much to do with the continued prosperity of Canada. About 88 companies are listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange, a small part of the total number of those making regular dividend disbursements in Canada, but for the third quarter of this year these 88 companies distributed in dividends over twenty million dollars, of which the Canadian Pacific alone accounted for $7,500,000. This was by far the largest distribution by any one company, the next largest being $2,837,500. The number who regularly benefit by these distributions of profits is increasing every year, thus showing a more general tendency on the part of the Canadians to invest their earnings in the stocks of well established and sound industrial concerns.

LET MAMA DRIVE, PAPA

BY ERWIN GREER

(President Greer College of Electrical and Automotive trades, Chicago, Ill.)

Today it is just as appropriate to say that "womans place is in the automobile" as it used to be to say: "Woman's place is in he home". For the automobile is a reality a part of the home, a travelling part, whose standard should be kept up as well as the stationary part of that home.

You probably know a woman who began driving six months ago. Look at her!

Her eyes are full of lustre and strength, with steady movements and strong observation. Her skin is full of life, and even her hair has a feel of energy. Her muscles are rounder and more flexible. Her bearing is totally different, her gesture or her body, her hands, the tilt of her head. She has lost her "affected" way of speaking, her nervousness is gone, and she walks to her car with a knowledge that she "belongs."

"Do you drive a car ?" is one of the first questions asked by a teacher of memory in New York. "If you do," says he, "I can graduate you in a fraction of the time it ordinarily takes to complete the development of memory under my system. Because of the skill, exactitude and control you must exercise in driving, the faculty of memory will naturally be more quickly developed."

"Since I got my car," said one woman, "I am more careful about buying. I get up earlier in the morning, feel better, do my work more quickly and more systematically, and I can do ten times as much in a day as I used to. I can be with my children, driving them about, showing them things in the right way, and we all call for daddy at night. I feel that our little car is a member of the family—it has brought us so much happiness which cannot ordinarily be bought with money. In order to go out during the day I have planned things better in the home so that my work can be done in two or three hours. When I used to stay at home all the time, some of it never did get done ; I used to have headaches, and my husband had to do the marketing at night.

E. W. GILLETT CO. LTD. TORONTO, CAN.

MAJORITY OF HARVESTERS ARE WELL SATISFIED

Montreal, October 27.—James Dunlop, Commissioner of the Scottish Board of Agriculture, is one man in authority in Britain who is not inclined to accept the tales of woe told by some of the miner-harvesters who have returned to Britain for Western harvest fields.

Having investigated himself, the conditions in Canada under which these harvesters from the old land were working, he is in a position to dispute some of the statements made.

Returning last week to Great Britain he stated that "the vast majority of the men with whom I came in contact were well satisfied with the conditions and were optimistic about the future. From all I heard and saw in the West, most of the men gave a good account of themselves in the harvest fields."

Mr. Dunlop does not minimize the difficulties which a number of harvesters who came out from the old land, encountered. Some of them, he said, were affected by the change of climate and water and food, and suffered as a consequence from physical ailments, which prevented their being successful. Some were physically unable to face the work, but, he says, "there were 50 miners on the boat on which I went to Canada, and physically the vast majority of them were as fine a crowd as one would wish to see.

Though he thought that the organization at the Canadian end for looking after the harvesters, was somewhat incomplete, Mr. Dunlop referred particularly to the good work done by the Colonization Department of the Canadian National Railways, whose officials, he said, "struck me as particularly capable men and genuinely anxious to do their best for the harvesters."

Another man of authority in agricultural matters in Britain who is now in Montreal after spending over a month in Canada and who saw something of the conditions under which the harvesters worked, is John Garton, vice-chairman of the National Farmers' Union of England. Mr. Garton has little patience with some of the calamity tales of the miner-harvesters. "There was nothing about the Canadian harvest," said Mr. Garton to Dr. Black, Director of Colonization for the Canadian National Railways, "that is any harder than the work of our own harvest fields back home. The hours may be longer, but there is not any work connected with the harvest here I would be afraid to tackle myself, though I am over three score years. I can quite realize that many of the miners who came out would, from lack of physical exercise for a year or so, be very soft, and also that many of them would not at once take to the more isolated life on Western farms, but a month at the work would make them physically fit and I can see no reason for complaint otherwise."

In signed statements from twenty-one of the old country harvesters, voluntarily forwarded to the Colonization Department of the Canadian National Railways, satisfaction is expressed with the conditions under which these men worked. Some of these men are preparing to take jobs for the winter, and others intend to take up farms of their own. "Any one can do well in Canada if he is not afraid of work" is the way one of the signed statements puts it, which sums up the opinions of the score or more of others who wrote letters.

Sardine Trappers.

Airplanes have been very successful in finding schools of sardines, enticing others to a suitable spot by dropping bait into the sea, and then wirelessing to fishing vessels.

Several French sardine packing concerns already use this system. The only difficulty, they say, is that of finding a market for the fish. Thousands of tons were canned last year because they could not be sold at prices which would recompense the dealers.

According to the aviators engaged in the "fish" survey, schools of sardines can be seen for a distance of twenty miles when flying at a height of a thousand yards.

White Star Steamer Athenic Going to Antarctic With Whalers.

The old White Star liner Athenic which had run on the Atlantic, will shortly be put into commission on the Antarctic seas as a floating factory in connection with the whale fishing industry, says the London Daily Mail.

At present the vessel is undergoing reconstruction for its new service at Middlesbrough, and when completed will be the largest and most up-to-date whale ship depot in the world.

The ship has been purchased by a Norwegian firm which specializes in the whaling industry, and it is being reconditioned so as to permit of the manufacture on the high seas of the many commodities and oils which can be extracted from the whale.

A fleet of "catches" (small whaling craft) will operate in the Antarctic seas, and will return at short intervals with their captures.

A Daily Mail reporter was informed by an official of Smith's Dock Co., Middlesbrough, that a number of small vessels were in use in the Antarctic seas for extracting oils from whales, but none had such elaborate machinery for manufacturing purposes as it was proposed to install in the Athenic.

HEALTH HABITS.

A great deal has been written and said about health habits, and about the importance of starting the child on life's adventure with proper health habits. There is no doubt that it is just as easy to establish right habits as wrong ones. Habits are acts which we repeat, without thinking about them at the time we perform them. We do not cut from our knives because it is our habit to put only forks and spoons into our mouths. We do this without thinking because back in our childhood days our parents, by example and correction, established this as a habit with us.

Those who have established that most important habit of washing the hands before eating, practise this habit and do not feel comfortable if they sit down to eat without washing. The same is true as regards the cleaning of the teeth. The person who cleans his teeth regularly finds that his mouth feels dirty if he misses the regular cleansing.

These and other simple, regular habits can be established in the child by a consistent effort on the part of the parents. The effort will be repaid many times in the better health of the child, and in the happier and less troublesome existence for parent and child that will grow out of a life that is regular.

The child is not a small adult; he is not to be looked upon as such. His desire for play is natural and should be encouraged. We do not want to make him "a little man." Proper health habits do not interfere with his child life ; they help to make him enjoy it more and to keep him well ; also, to prepare him for the adult years which lie ahead of him.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College St., Toronto, will be answered by letter. Questions as to the diagnosis and treatment will not be answered.

Carvings of Gorillas.

Monstrous gorilla-like figures of stone, coming from the gorilla-less land of the Mayas, are one of the unexplained curiosities of the Archeological and Historical Museum in Merida, Yucatan.

There are two of these creatures, legless, but standing more than five feet high on their stumps of thighs. They are rude but powerful works of art, done in rough and pitted limestone. They were brought to the museum a short time ago by Don Luis Rosado Vega, founder and director of the institution, who discovered the stone monsters sitting alone at the bottom of a hill near the town of Tekax, Yucatan.

Coal Produced In Europe.

The coal produced in Britain in 1927 was 252 million tons; the quantity over all Europe, outside Britain was 244 millions.

B. A. NEALE

B. A. Neale, popular manager of the Chateau Frontenac, whose appointment as manager of the new Royal York Hotel in Toronto is announced to be effective November 1st. The managing of the Royal York is considered the most ambitious hotel position on the continent. Mr. Neale has steadily risen in Canadian Pacific service since 1911, when he transferred to the hotel department from the General Superintendent's office in Montreal.

...das Been Purchasing Large Quantities of Wheat From Canada.

Canada has been benefiting to the extent of many millions of dollars by large purchases of wheat made by Russia recently, says Agricultural and Industrial Progress in Canada. It is estimated that in one week alone that country bought 8,000,000 bushels of wheat the greater part of it the produce of Western Canada. Heavy shipments of grain have been made from Montreal and Vancouver direct to Russian ports, and in addition, large quantities of grain have been forwarded to other countries have been diverted to Russia, so that in all a vast amount of Canadian grain has gone to Russia during the year, to the benefit of Canadian farmers and growers and exporters.

Such voluminous purchasing is quite unusual. In 1925 shipments of wheat to Russia amounted to only 8,000 bushels and in 1927 to 1,500 bushels, the latter being the year before 1926. According to trade returns there have been no shipments of wheat to Russia from Canada for the last fifteen months. In 1925 and 1926 Russia purchased Canadian flour to the value of 1,142,000 and 1,000,000 respectively. This demand has so far been confined to wheat. It is then stated by trade experts that the present scale of the situation may be eventually extended to flour.

Since the Russian trade commissioner in Montreal closed his office a year ago the Canadian Government severed relations with Russia, there have been no official representations between the two countries and Russian buying in North America has been carried on through corporations in New York. In the last fiscal year Canadian trade returns show that the Dominion exported to Russia goods to the value of $2,424,671 as compared with $2,497,206 in the previous year. In the year Dominion imports from that country increased to 273,319 from $20,326 the year before. Exports to Russia were slightly higher the year before, at $3,795,473, this being the highest figure since the end of the war with the exception of 1925, when the heavy purchase of flour brought the value up to $11,672,159.

Russian purchases in America recently have been largely of manufactured goods and machinery, Canada's share of this business consisting largely of farm implements which have been imported in an effort to rehabilitate its agricultural industry. In the past year Canada exported to that country 1,620 harvesters and binders worth $302,238 as compared with 1,580 worth $282,581 in the previous year; 1,383 mowing machines worth $123,600 as against 1,911 worth $116,837; 748 drills worth $159,605 as compared with 617 worth $102,332; ploughs to the value of $24,234 as against $174,674; and implement parts to the value of $68,481 as compared with $54,758. In addition, Russia purchased from Canada 70,352 cwt. of binder twine worth $734,859 as compared with 67,178 cwt. worth $746,304 the year before.

friends Nannie and Jess, and Nannie wrote me a short note accompanying the invitation, saying, 'Be sure to bring an escort with you, Olive, if your papa will allow you to do so, for "the more the merrier" will be our motto.' Edith and Grace, and, oh, papa, all of the girls of our set will be there with escorts—and—I thought if you wouldn't mind, I would like very much to—to—ask Roger Glendenning."

The judge held his pretty young daughter off at arm's-length and looked into her blushing face, his own stern and grave, and the dark frown deepening on his brow.

"Why did you choose Roger Glendenning from among all your other acquaintances?" he asked, grimly.

"Because he is nicer than any of the rest," replied Olive, fearlessly; "and I hope you will try to spare him for the afternoon, papa. Won't you?"

"I want you to answer me one question truthfully, here and now, Olive," said the judge, huskily. "Are you interested in this Glendenning? Do you care for him, I mean?"

"Oh, papa!" cried the girl, blushing furiously, "how can you ask me such a question? You are perfectly dreadful!" and she tried to break away from her father's detaining grasp and hide her face in her handkerchief; but he held her fast.

"I want you to tell me, my little girl," he said. "Are you interested in my late private secretary, Roger Glendenning?"

"Your late secretary, papa?" repeated Olive, catching up the word at once. "Why, what can you mean by that?"

"You answer me one question by asking another," said the judge, impatiently. "You must give me a straight-forward reply."

"After you tell me what you mean by the words, your late secretary," murmured Olive, eagerly.

"I mean that Roger Glendenning is a my employ no longer," said the judge, slowly. "I discharged him this forenoon."

In all the long years of Judge Kneeland's after life he never forgot the expression that came over his daughter's face.

"Why, papa?" she asked; and all the joyousness and sweetness had left out of her young voice; it sounded like nothing human.

For a moment he hesitated. Was it best to explain the matter to Olive? She knew less of such affairs than a little child; he had always guarded her so zealously from hearing aught of the great, wicked world outside that might taint her beautiful white soul; even the daily papers he excluded from his home. He had been very careful as to whom she should choose as companions.

The old judge had a great regard for the dainty, flaxen-haired, blue-eyed Miss Nannie, whom his daughter loved dearer than all the rest of her friends; she was so sweet, so refined, so gentle—quite his idea of what a lovely innocent young girl should be. Dark-eyed Jessie, too, was certainly a girl whose society he liked to have Olive cultivate. The Edith and Grace she referred to were equally as charming. Should he tell Olive of what Glendenning had done?

"It is you who do not answer now, papa," said Olive, with a great sob in her voice. "Why did you discharge him?"

"I had good reason to do so," returned her father, gravely. "I traced to him a great crime—a felony. He forged my name to a note for a thousand dollars, and when accused of it he could not deny it, but brazened it out with all the effrontery of a hardened old offender."

The girl broke away from his detaining hand with a low cry.

"I do not—I will not believe it, papa!" she cried, vehemently. "There must be some terrible mistake. If a trumpet-tongued angel cried it out from heaven I should still refuse to believe it. Roger Glendenning is too noble to stoop to a felony. He would cut off his right hand first. There is something terribly wrong about it."

Judge Kneeland made no attempt to argue the matter with her; it would be a mere waste of words he told himself. Young girls were always carried away by sympathy; it was in their nature; they were not quite responsible for their lack of judgment where a young and handsome man was concerned.

"Where is he now, papa?" sobbed Olive.

"Where every man of his class should be," observed the judge, grimly; "behind the bars, my dear."

"Oh, how horrible!" cried Olive Kneeland, in the keenest anguish. "I am going to him at once to offer him my sympathy and tell him how implicitly I believe in his innocence."

"Husk!" cried the old judge, harshly. "You will do nothing of the kind. Offer sympathy to a man who has forged your father's name! I should say not. I order you, ay—do you hear me and take in my meaning?—I command you to never think of that rascal again or mention his name in my presence. Do you understand me?"

It was the first time in all his life that Judge Kneeland had ever spoken harshly to the girl he idolized. He saw her face grow white as death and her bosom heave convulsively. But she was too proud, too self-willed to allow the tears to come to her angry blue eyes.

"I fear I am going to have trouble with Olive over this unfortunate affair," the judge told himself, in alarm.

CHAPTER V.

"I did not mean to speak crossly to you, my dear," said Judge Kneeland, his voice a little husky and tremulous, "I quite forgot myself for a moment, but, speaking seriously, Olive, I wish you to pay heed to my words; do not waste your sympathy upon Roger Glendenning; he is entirely unworthy of it. I regret keenly that I ever allowed him to cross my threshold."

Olive did not answer; this troubled him.

"Did he ever speak to you upon the subject of love, Olive?" he asked, abruptly. "I ask the question in all earnestness; you may answer it or not just as you please; still, it would be better if you were to make a confidant of me, my child."

"Would it make you more lenient with him, papa?" asked the girl in a low, shaking voice, eager with tremulous emotion.

"It will do no harm to try and see," returned the old judge, evasively.

"Back to the Soil."

Movement of the Jews "back to the soil," which has reached surprisingly large proportions in the United States, was described by Rabbi B. R. Blickner, of Cleveland, before a round table on agriculture. "The number of Jews who desire to go on the soil in the United States," he told the round table, "is constantly growing. Jewish farms are now estimated at one million acres and valued at between $125,000,000 and $150,000,000.
